Though there has long been the rumor that redheads are a dying breed, we happen to love people with fiery tresses. Whether strawberry blonde or Little Mermaid red, it's all unique and beautiful.

Julianne Moore, perhaps one of Hollywood's most famous redheads, appeared on "The Colbert Report (<https://youtu.be/W6ddtmfQn-0>)," and Colbert couldn't resist asking her about her famous locks. He even called her a "ginger icon," declaring: "When you think redhead, you think Julianne Moore." (We tootally agree!)

The actress has a good sense of humor about her hair now, but admits that she hated being a freckly ginger as a child.

“How do you feel about the myth or the rumors that gingers have no souls?” he asked. “I have complicated feelings about it, about being a redhead in general,” Julianne admitted. “Because people have expectations that somehow your hair has something to do with your personality. You’re either feisty or you’re sexy.”

She also said she’s “a very tough redhead, in response to the assertion that gingers feel less pain (who comes up with this stuff?!) but Colbert declined the chance to test her on it.

As one of our #wcws, we think Julianne (and her amazing hair) is flawless.
