...and it looks like a complete mess.

I have no idea why live musicals \(http://www.pixable.com/article/peter-pan-live-jane-krakowski-74422\) are a thing, but I can't help but scratch my head over them. If the original musical in question is campy, "so-bad-it's-good" fun, or if it's just well-done and thoroughly enjoyable, there's something about airing it on live TV with a bunch of famous actors that ends up making it all seem so, so bad.

The teaser trailer for "Grease: Live," which airs on Fox on January 31, just dropped. We've got a bunch of pretty talented people here: Carly Rae Jepsen as Frenchie, Julianne Hough as Sandy, Vanessa Hudgens as Rizzo, and Keke Palmer as Marty. So, theoretically, it should be good.

Um, let's just say my hopes are not high. We all know by now that I take Grease and its sequel (<http://www.pixable.com/article/grease-2-cinematic-treasure-32962>) pretty seriously, and I just can't take this seriously. I mean, I'll obviously be watching — but I can't promise I won't be laughing my way through the thing, and not even in a "Showgirls" way.

I guess we'll just have to reserve full judgment until January on this one.
